George Weyerhaeuser Freed by Abductors; Federal Agents Start Hunt for Karpis and His Gang; Boy Identifies Trio--'Harry, Bill And Alvin'--$200,000 Ransom Paid for Lad

PRAYERS ARE OFFERED BY HAPPY GROUP

Uncle of Youth Held For Nearly 8 Days Pays Price for Freedom.

GIVEN DOLLAR WHEN RELEASED

(Copyright, 1935, By A. P.)

Tacoma, June 1.—Little George Weyerhaeuser was freed early today after nearly eight days' captivity by his kidnappers. Believed to be the notorious Alvin Karpis gang, who got $200,000 ransom as the price of the boy's freedom.

No sooner had the 9-year-old lad been restored to his overjoyed parents, than the greatest manhunt in the Pacific northwest was unleashed to capture the abductors.

The boy identified three of his captors as "Harry, Bill and Alvin—who must be that fellow Karpis."

George referred to Alvin Karpis, widely sought gang leader, whose name and that of his gangster pals has flitted through the story of the abduction for the past two days.

Parents Offer Prayers

Federal agents clamped immediate silence on all details of the search, while Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Weyerhaeuser offered prayers of thanks and clasped their son in the seclusion of their home.

The ransom was paid by F. Rodman Titcomb, uncle of the boy who was seized from a Tacoma street May 24, as he returned from school during a noon recess.

When or how the money was paid could not be learned, but apparently the snatchers were given the full amount they demanded for the release of the boy, a sum which has been paid only twice before—in the kidnapping of Edward G. Bremer and Charles F. Urschel.

The boy was released about four miles from Issaquah, 25 miles northwest of here, and made his way as dawn broke to the farm home of George Boniface.

Washington, June 1 (AP)—J. Edgar Hoover, director of bureau of investigation, today confirmed that George Weyerhaeuser, 9-year-old Tacoma kidnap victim, was safe.

He refused to amplify his conversation.

"I have nothing to add," he said. "Any further statements must come from the Weyerhaeusers."

Police Get Word

Tacoma, Wash., June 1 (AP).—Acting Police Captain Harold Thornberg announced today that a man had called him from Issaquash, Washington, and said he had found kidnapped George Weyerhaeuser, 9, on the road and was bringing him to the police station. Thornberg said he could not understand the man's name.

George disappeared a week ago Friday noon. That evening his parents received a special delivery letter demanding $200,000 ransom.

Captain Thornberg would not or did not learn any details from his unknown caller. He did not know whether the ransom had been paid.

Thornberg immediately notified the department of justice headquarters and they sent three men to the police station to meet the unidentified motorist.

Papers Reports Release

Seattle, June 1 (AP).—The Times said today George Weyerhaeuser was turned loose in the woods near Issaquah at 4 a. m. today by the kidnappers after they were paid $200,000 ransom.

The Times said the 9-year-old boy went to a nearby house, aroused the family and told them he was the kidnapped boy.

The owner of the home to which the boy went is a Mr. Boniza, who bundled the boy into his car and, the Times said, sped to Renton, to a telephone and called the Weyer-

Nude Man Is Nailed to a Rough Cross

High Point, N. C., June 1 (AP). J. R. Riggs, middle-aged filling station operator, was found nailed to a rough board cross lying beside the roadway near his establishment early today. Ten-penny nails through each hand and each foot held him to the cross.

P. A. Walls, traveling the road, came upon the awesome spectacle of Riggs' naked figure spiked to the crudely constructed cross at 3 a. m. and summoned help.

With the aid of an ambulance crew Walls removed the nails and Riggs was taken down.

He was carried to a hospital, where attaches said his wounds were painful but not serious.

Police quoted the filling station operator as saying three men came to his station, where he slept, ordered him from bed and nailed him to the cross.

Farmers' Market Opens With Capacity House; Borough Market Sparse

BOROUGH'S BUSINESS PLACE GIVEN FAVORABLE COMMENT BY PATRONS

Gettysburg's rival indoor markets played their initial engagement here today, with the market of the Adams county market-growers' association emerging with most of the honors.

In number of hucksters and patrons, the farmers' market in the Sachs building, rear of York street, far outstripped the borough's market in the American Legion building, Baltimore street.

In general appearance, however, the borough's market had the better of the engagement, patrons asserted. The Baltimore street market occupies the first floor of an addition constructed to the American Legion building, and its newness and freshness appealed to those customers who dealt there.

The building in which the farmers' market is located, a former hotel stable, was hastily remodeled by Luther I. Sachs, and work on the interior and exterior still remains to be completed.

42 at Farmers' Market

Then, too, the borough's market is more readily accessible than the Farmers' market, some buyers declared. There is a hall from Baltimore street directly into the borough market, whereas customers at the Farmers' market had their choice of walking through an alley between the Gettysburg National bank and the Sachs apartment building or walking through Race Horse alley from Carlisle or North Stratton streets.

But the Farmers' market was doing the business this morning. Forty-two hucksters were in attendance there, with only seven at the borough's market house, and one of them selling city produce.

Every stall at the Farmers' market was filled long before the official opening hour, 6 o'clock, and some of the hucksters were forced to display their merchandise outside.

Customers filled the Farmers' Market during the first three hours and buying was so brisk that many of the marketmen sold out by mid-morning.

Many of the customers at the Farmers' Market later inspected the borough's market house, and commented favorably upon its brightness and accessibility.

Crowd Exceeds Expectations

Danner A. Peters, of near Gardners, president of the market-growers' association, was enthusiastic over the initial session of the Farmers' Market. "The crowd of hucksters and patrons was far beyond our expectations," he said. "We will have to provide more space for our farmers if this continues."

The hucksters themselves were jubilant over the market, many of them declaring today's market session was the best they have had in 15 years.

"This beats the curb market," one huckster said, and others around him echoed his sentiments. "Here we are in the dry and we are getting the buyers which is the most important item."

Mr. Peters predicted that by next week when strawberries are more plentiful, the Farmers' Market house will not be large enough to accommodate all the hucksters.

Building Enlarging Planned

Mr. Sachs is already planning to enlarge the building on the encouragement given him by the farmers and patrons today.

Council meets on Monday evening to lay down rules and regulations for its own market. The same regulations will govern the Farmers' Market.

Prices of produce at both markets were practically the same, although the local dealer at the borough market, who was selling city produce, cut prices on strawberries to dispose of his supply.

Today's Prices

With the opening of the two indoor markets, Gettysburg's curb market, established here in 1910, passes out of existence.

Prices of leading products at both places follow:

Dressed chickens, 60 cents to $1.65; eggs, 25 cents a dozen; onions, 5 and 10 cents a bunch; radishes, 5 cents a bunch; asparagus, two bunches for 25 cents; strawberries, 15 cents a box; butter, 30 cents a pound; lettuce, 5 cents; rhubarb, 10 cents a bunch; canned pears, plums and peaches, 25 cents a quart; apples, $1.50 a bushel; live spring chickens, 26 cents a pound; old chickens, 18 cents a pound; honey, 15 and 18 cents a comb; spinach, 10 cents a quarter peck.

INJURED MAN STILL SERIOUS

John S. Wolf, 50, Badly Hurt When Barn Comb Gives Way.

The condition of John S. Wolf, 50-year-old Biglerville carpenter, injured in a fall from the ridge of a barn roof, Friday afternoon, remained serious at the Warner hospital today.

He suffered fractures of both legs above the knees, a broken jaw, lacerations of the head and face and a possible fracture of the skull.

The accident occurred at the farm of John Sheman on the Biglerville-Centre Mills road at two o'clock, Friday afternoon, while Wolf and Emory Funt, also of Biglerville, assisted by Sheman, were remodeling the barn.

Wolf was standing on a ladder lowering rafters when the comb of the barn roof gave way and he fell 28 feet. The fall rendered Wolf unconscious.

Dr. Raymond Oyler, of Biglerville, was called to the Sheman farm. After an examination, he directed that the injured man be removed to the hospital. Wolf was brought to the Warner hospital in the Gettysburg ambulance.

haeusers in Tacoma from an oil station.

There was no answer, no one responding to the glad tidings that the boy was free and safe.

The Times said the kidnappers told the youthful dark complexioned lad: "Wait for your dad. He'll be along pretty soon." He was free about dawn.

George waited as they told him, but his father did not appear and soon he started trudging down the road and came to the home where he reported himself.

"Bright As Can Be"

So Boniza asked the telephone girl to call the Tacoma police station and the first word of the boy's discovery was flashed.

The Tacoma police told Boniza to hurry to Tacoma with the boy and he sped to the Weyerhaeuser home.

Ernie T. Backlund, attendant at the oil station, confirmed the news made public at Tacoma.

"He's as bright as can be. He was tickled to death. He told us the man who kidnapped him had 'plenty of money, alright' for they gave him a dollar when they left him in the woods."

"He was alright," Backlund declared.

"They must have been here ten minutes," Backlund added, "trying to get the Weyerhaeusers and then the police. They left here about ten minutes to seven."

MAN IS KILLED AS TRUCK BACKS OVER HIS BODY

J. V. Walsh, Harrisburg, Well Known Here, Fatally Hurt On Friday.

MISHAP OCCURS NEAR SCRANTON

When a large truck backed over him at Scranton Friday afternoon, John V. Walsh, widely-known construction superintendent, of Harrisburg, and well known in Gettysburg, was fatally injured.

Walsh died on the way to a Scranton hospital shortly after the accident which occurred on the new Scranton - Daleville highway where he had been employed since October as general superintendent of a construction project for Sweeney Brothers, contractors.

He had been a resident of Harrisburg for eight years, making his home there after he was placed in charge of the construction work for the Reading company cut from Steelton to Rutherford by the Whiting, Turner company. The project was considered an outstanding engineering feat at the time.

Began Work At 16

When he was 16 years old, Walsh got his first job as a laborer with Whalen Brothers, of Towanda, on a section project for the New York, Susquehanna and Western railroad. At 19 he was made head superintendent for a railorad construction job near East Branch, New York. After that time he had many important assignments, especially for railroads and municipalities east of the Alleghenies, although his work took him as far west as the coast and into the southern states.

In March, 1931, Walsh figured prominently as a plaintiff witness in a $160,000 damage suit of the John F. Casey company against the city of Wheeling, West Virginia, in the federal court at Wheeling. He was first employed by the Casey company in 1919 on a coal stripping project in Pennsylvania.

Various Projects

The various projects which Walsh superintended included canal work in Massachusetts, railroad work for the Erie in New York, apartment excavation in Pittsburgh and numerous bridge and road construction jobs. He was general superintendent for the Robert W. Grace Construction company, Cleveland, Ohio, in 1916, and in 1919 went with the Dupont Powder company in Pittsburgh. He was in charge of the building of an ornamental bridge across the Rapahannock river for the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac railway and superintended a sewer project at Richmond, Virginia, for fifteen months.

During the World war, Walsh declined to serve as a railroad construction head in France.

"It was a good offer," he related later, "but I did not want the job. I told them to bring the railroads over here and I would build them."

Walsh was born in Dushore, Sullivan county, and will be buried at Lopez, in the same county. He was 52 years old and is survived by his widow, Mrs. Mary G. Walsh; a son, John Walsh, Jr., a student at Edison Junior high school, Harrisburg; a brother, Walter, of Cleveland, and four sisters, two of Lopez, and two of Binghamton, New York.

Mrs. Walsh left for Lopez Friday afternoon with her son when she learned of the death of her husband.

He was a member of St. Francis' Catholic church and the Holy Name society in Harrisburg.

HOOVER SAYS PUBLIC THOUGHT IS CONFUSED

Golden, Col., June 1 (AP).—Making but one indirect reference to public affairs, former President Herbert Hoover told the graduating class of the Colorado state school of mines Friday that "this is a time of great confusion in public thought."

Mr. Hoover, who received an honorary degree of doctor of engineering from the school, did not enlarge on his statement, and when asked later if he had any comment on the state of the nation replied "nope, not a word."

Mr. Hoover expressed appreciation for the honorary degree conferred upon him and said it was a distinction to be "from an institution given over solely to my profession."

VA. FISHERMAN SAVES WRECKED NAVY FLYERS

Norfolk, Va., June 1 (AP).—A navy plane that banked too low cracked up in Little Bay Friday, but a fisherman pulled Pilot D. N. Hawks and W. S. Hassell, his observer, from the water. A wrecking barge was sent to the scene to grapple for the plane, which sank almost immediately.

Pilot Hawks was landing the plane after the early morning "weather hop." His vision obscured by the mist that rose above the water, he was barely skimming the surface of the bay when he attempted to bank the ship. A wing plowed into the water, the plane nosed over and the two men, soaked in the gasoline that escaped from the burst tanks, were catapulted into the water.

A fisherman, whose name was not learned, pulled the dazed but uninjured flyers from the bay.

"WHITE SEALS" REPORTED SEEN IN HUDSON RIVER

Albany, N. Y., June 1 (AP).—The strange story of a group of creatures described as "white seals" is making the rounds along the Hudson river waterfront.

The tale was brought to port by the captain of a British ocean-going freighter bound for Albany.

"In twenty years as a pilot I have never seen anything like them," Capt. Leon Oldmixon, Sandy Hook pilot, who was at the helm, said.

"I promptly called Capt. Reginald Lester, who has been nearly everywhere on the globe. He said they were seals, and I'm willing to take his word for it."

The white seals, it seems, only stayed in sight a few seconds.

BEAR AND PUPPIES PALS

Kingstree, S. C. (AP).—Affection of a captive bear for two puppies at the home of M. H. Jacobs recently caused the bruin to spurn liberty. Because of its growth, Jacobs took the bear back to the swamps and set it free. But next morning it was back home playing with the puppies. Jacobs decided to let it stay.

AMUSEMENTS

Preparation for a period of six months, during which he delved into more than 100 books and spent several weeks making screen tests preceded the start of George Arliss in the title roll of Darryl Zanuck's 20th Century Pictures spectacle, "Cardinal Richelieu," which plays Monday and Tuesday at the Majestic theatre.

The cast supporting Arliss includes Maureen O'Sullivan, Edward Arnold, Cesar Romero, Francis Lister, Douglas Dumbrille, Violet Kemble Cooper, Kathryn Alexander, Lumsden Hare and Halliwell Hobbes.

Like the star's previous success, "The House of Rothschild," "Cardinal Richelieu" centers its drama around a great historic controversy, depicting the stormy times of King Louis XIII of France when church and state were contending for power and the great political prelate, Richelieu, was the real power behind the throne. As young lovers, Maureen O'Sullivan and Ceasar Romero, enact a love drama around which the larger drama of political intrigue swirls and rages.

Scenically, "Cardinal Richelieu" is the most pretentious of all Arliss starring vehicles. Art Director Richard Day has duplicated the splendor of feudal France, the magnificence of Louis XIII's palace, the Cathedral of Notre Dame in Paris. And the costumes worn by the star were especially made in Rome.

ENEMY'S KISS by Evelyn M. Winch

SYNOPSIS: Daphne Sumers, the woman who is to marry Alison Rede's father, has accused Guy Westurn of being Dr. Guy Lumley, a shady physician. Alison, who loves Guy, denies the charge, and adds that Daphne is marrying Mr. Rede for his money. Alison is telling Guy of the quarrel when a truck strikes a little girl just ahead of Guy's car. Guy rushes to aid the girl—saying "I'm a doctor."

Chapter 30

"Is she badly hurt?" Alison put the question to a woman with a battered straw hat who was working her way out the front rank—a fat woman with a motherly face.

"Doctor in there says she's all right," the woman replied promptly, "but she's had a nasty knock, pore little thing."

Alison squeezed forward a bit; she must get hold of Guy.

"Stand back there, please. Don't keep crowding in." The policeman swept his arm out like a barrier, repeating his warning impartially to the whole crowd. Alison on the other side of the blue, outstretched arm tried to catch Guy's eye, but he was busy, answering the questions of the second policeman and he did not even look towards her, though she was a bare foot away.

"If you'd give me your name and address, sir—" The stub of pencil and the fat notebook were in waiting.

"My name's Lumley. Dr. Lumley. And the address is care of Dr. Dundas—"

Alison did not wait to hear more. Guy Lumley. Daphne was right!

She flung her head up blindly, turned and pushed past the crowd, round the first corner, conscious of nothing except a sick longing to get away quickly.

She walked so fast that she was almost running as she sped blindly through the little dirty streets which make a maze of Soho. Greasy looking loungers at the street corners and blowsy women who went bare-headed in shawls started at her as she hurried past the low, grey, grimy houses, the garlic-scented stores and the eating-houses which wafted an odor of cabbage and stale fat.

A taxi hooted at her angrily to get out of the road, a man with a barrow load of flowers swore at her as he veered out of the way. Alison did not hear either.

Walking with a loose-swinging stride, her face white, her grey eyes wide open and staring like those of a sleepwalker, she went blindly with nothing in her mind but those bare facts: Guy had been telling lies.

He was the man whom Daphne had called notorious, the doctor who had lost his practice because of his ways with women, with girls.

Far down New Oxford Street, near the turning to the British Museum, she came out into the traffic, and, sighting a taxi, hailed it. Climbing in, she ordered the driver to go on driving until she told him to stop.

It was long past five when Alison got out at the house in Chester Square, gave the taxi-driver a pound note and let herself in.

She was calm enough now; much too calm. She felt as though some mainspring inside her had broken, as if nothing could ever matter, any more.

She pulled her hat off and walked straight into the library.

They had finished tea. Daphne sat on the sofa, curled up with six cushions stacked behind her head; Robert was standing by the fireplace, looking grave, a newspaper in his hand. They both looked round as she came in.

She could not see herself; had made no effort to get tidy and could not guess how distraught she looked with her hat off, her hair on end, her cheeks stained with tears, her eyes red-rimmed and dark in her small, chalk-white face. She came forward and stood stiffly, addressing Daphne like a person who recites a lesson.

"I'm sorry. I apologize for what I said. You were right. He is the man you thought. I—I won't ever see him again!" With that she broke and ran out of the room.

She was nearly at the top of the front stairs when her father, flying after her, caught her by the arm.

"Alison? My dear, what's happened?"

She backed out of his grasp, said in the same stiff, hard voice, "Nothing. I just know, that's all."

She ran then to her room, would have shut and locked the door but he was too quick for her, had his foot inside and forced it open.

"No, let me in—Alison dear, you must listen!" As she gave way he followed her inside. "Listen, Alison—he's been round here while I was out." And in a low and troubled voice, "Child, you don't mean what you said? You don't really mean you—love the fellow?"

He was looking tired and worried, at another time she might have thought of him but now she backed out of his reach and up against the bed.

"Yes . . ." That in a whisper; then, a quick passionate cry, "Yes! But I'm not! I don't He's just a common liar! I don't ever want to see him again. Oh!" She dropped on the bed, her face hidden, her head rocking on both arms as she crouched there crying.

Her father looked down at her sob-shaken shoulders, deeply troubled. The door behind him opened and Daphne came gliding softly in. She did not speak; she looked from the girl weeping on the bed to Robert, a question in her eyes. He shrugged his shoulders.

"Alison, dear—"

She threw off his hand violently.

"Can't you leave me alone?"

She sprang from the bed, ran with averted face into her bathroom and shut the door. The two waiting outside could hear her splashing water on her swollen face and the slow, heavy sobs growing slower, further apart, until they ceased.

Robert's eyebrows signalled; Daphne shook her head.

"I shouldn't," she whispered. "Not yet. She's too upset. Tell her after dinner. Get her to take an aspirin and make her lie down."

When Alison came out of the bathroom, her face laved and powdered, she found her father alone nursing a bottle of aspirin.

They were to dine early, at seven, as they were all going on to a play. By the time that Alison was dressed for dinner in her newest, stiff faille dress, with a huge bustle bow below the slim waistline at the back, all the traces of her storm were safely hidden.

Daphne had been back to her flat and had changed into sleek mulberry satin, the split skirt lined to the hem with turquois blue; even Robert, in his dinner jacket with his grey moustache trimly flattened down, seemed to have recovered.

As they sat down to dinner they were all three determined to make the evening go smoothly.

"Have you decided where to go?" she asked Daphne at the end of dinner.

They might have been three polite strangers meeting.

"Why, yes. We've fixed everything."

Daphne and Robert were glancing at each other across the table with a congratulatory air. Alison could read those messages without words which said, "Good! She's come round. She's going to be sensible, it's all over."

She felt faintly amused. It was very odd how nothing in the world made difference now. The idea of going to the Pyrenees, which had appalled her, simply did not matter any more.

If Daphne wanted it, she would go and would do her best to make up for that scene in the morning by being pleasant. At least it would be better for her father than to have them quarrelling, and if Daphne's love for him was just a sham—well, was love ever anything else?

Robert was almost jovial. "It's going to be delightful!" he announced. "I got the special license today and I've wired the hotel for rooms. I'd actually fixed to sail for Madeira but no one can say that I'm not a good fiance! I've cancelled tickets, everything—found the address of the Spanish hotel and got rooms—and all at one day's notice! Only heaven knows what they'll be like. Don't blame me, Daphne, if you have to live on dry bread and garlic."

"Don't worry," Daphne promised, "I've not been there since I was a young girl and the cooking's Spanish but superb, and the scenery's quite marvellous. It's fascinating. The car road only goes part of the way and then you have to finish up on donkeys. A regular bandit's eyrie, right up among the mountains with a waterfall on one side and a place they call the Devil's Jump on the other, a sort of bottomless cleft in the side of the mountain. It's absolutely wild. You'll love it, Alison."

30,000 DIE IN INDIAN QUAKE

Three Rumbling Earth Shocks Shatter Frontier City In India, Friday.

(Associated Press Copyright, 1935)

Quetta, India, June 1 (AP).—The number of dead in this earthquake-stricken area was unofficially estimated at 30,000 today as relief work went forward under martial law, proclaimed to facilitate rescue of the injured and burial of the victims.

Karachi, India, June 1.—Three tremendous rumbling earth shocks shattered the northwest frontier city of Quetta early Friday, killing an estimated 20,000 Europeans and natives.

It was feared the death toll would go much higher with receipt of reports from outlying districts, especially that between Quetta and Kalat.

Friday night many of the dead still lay buried beneath debris, at which exhausted soldiers and volunteer relief workers were frantically tearing.

Unnumbered thousands were left homeless, destitute and panic-stricken when the three successive quakes, the most violent lasting 60 seconds, racked their homes to pieces about them.

Scores of British and Indian troops dropped in the streets from sheer exhaustion after unbroken hours of digging into debris, succoring the uncounted injured and organizing relief activities.

One relief train left Karachi Friday night. Another was being prepared. Aboard it were physicians, nurses, railway men, medical supplies and food. Messages from Quetta, sent by wireless because land lines were wrecked, said food was enough for several days.

Wireless Station Destroyed

Few fresh details as to the extent of the catastrophe were forthcoming owing to the destruction of the Quetta wireless station. Messages were being sent by way of Sibi, 70 miles from Quetta.

Meager advices said 50 Europeans and 153 Indians injured in the quake had been extricated from the ruins by military rescue parties Friday night and given hospital treatment.

Other reports said the Basu and Moti districts, the most thickly populated parts of Quetta, were completely razed. These sections were inhabited by Sindhis and various floating parts of the population.

Storm Follows Quake

Still other unconfirmed reports reaching Karachi said the main bazaar on the Bruce road to Quetta was afire. A severe storm followed the quake.

The important frontier post of Chaman, 60 miles northwest of Quetta, was reported wiped out, as was the town of Kalat.

Two Royal Air Force planes were scheduled to take off in the morning to assist in relief work in the devastated area.

Bitten by Copperhead, Minister Refuses Aid in Proof of Faith

St. Charles, Va., June 1 (AP).—His arm discolored and swollen almost double from the bite of a copperhead snake, which he permitted to bite him in a demonstration of the "power of faith," the Rev. George Hensley, holiness preacher, Friday night refused medical aid and said he would preach another sermon.

"I am not interested in help from doctors," he said. "I will get well in four days, with the help of the Lord."

The first bite from the venomous reptile, which the preacher pulled from a covered bucket at a revival last night, was apparently ineffective, but there was a swelling from a second bite in his thumb. He refused to do anything except pray, and was ill Thursday and Friday.

Interviewed late Friday, at a one-room mountain cabin, about three miles from St. Charles, where he is living with his wife and two small daughters, the 53-year-old evangelist said he had remained in bed all day, but expected to attend another service last night.

He said he had been in the ministry twenty-three years and had been bitten by many reptiles under similar circumstances.

"The Lord always healed the bites," he said.

Describing other events, which he called "miracles of faith," he said he had once lost a finger, and that it was healed by faith in one day. The Lord, he said, cured a case of tuberculosis he had when he entered the ministry and, on another occasion, healed injuries received from falling slate in a mine.

Medical aid was offered by citizens here, but the minister gave all the answer that he "didn't need a doctor."

The copperhead was captured in the mountains here by Ted Harris and Allen Jones. The minister has been in this vicinity for about two months.

Read the Bible With Us Daily

And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels,

And prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven.

And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, who deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night.

And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death.

Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabiters of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.

And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man child.

And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.

And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away on the flood.

And the earth helped the woman; and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth.

And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.—Revelation 12:7-17.

Today's Talk

By George Matthew Adams

THE CITY

I NEVER enter a city without feeling that I am coming into a "presence," personality, as true and real, and as vital as a living human being. I believe that a city even has a soul!

Regardless, I read the other evening a comment by Frank Swinnerton, referring to R. B. Cunninghame-Graham, in which he said that "for him a city is a compound for slaves, and the world an open space for every adventure."

How cruel a city can be to one who does not understand it, or who does not know how to enter into its graces. In a large sense, to it, you have to "belong" before it will take you into its confidences and its intimate thoughts. It is cruel. It is ruthless. It is cynical and cold—and hard. Why, then, does it teem with billions of souls, searching, hungering, and starving for just a bit of understanding and enrichment?

For over a quarter of a century I have lived in a city with millions of others. Even here in my quiet library, miles from its throbbing heart, with a robin's nest within a dozen feet from my writing desk, my ears catch the sound of its movements. Forever is it impersonal, however. The city, of itself, doesn't care!

People in the city live as though piled upon one another. Yet people love its very streets, its traditions, its intimate associations, and its man-made glories. "The biggest" this, and the "biggest" that, are the boasts of its own. Yet, also what an empty place it is, after all. How very void of beauty—the kind that quickens the heart and stirs the soul, and sends new blood to clear ones brain. Turmoil, confusion, noise, multitudes—and loneliness!

How strange our make-up. When in the city we long for the little town—and when in the little town, we long for the "great city." Give to this writer, however, "an open space for every adventure." The ocean, the silent plains, the cold and the intimate night under the stars. The mountains and the forest, and the fields of grain. The winding roads. The happy herds in the fields, the tinkling of the cowbell—the taste of clean air, bathed by the country sun and rain.

Dickens and Gissing both knew the city, and each loved his own, but their same city was a different one to each. But, after all, the mocking bird and the lark choose best!

Paul Redfern Alive in Jungles Is Miracle Father Is Awaiting

Washington, June 1 (AP). — Dr. Frederick C. Redfern, whose son, Paul, disappeared eight years ago on a non-stop flight to Brazil, waited eagerly here Friday night in the hope that a miracle might come true.

On August 25, 1927, young Redfern—"he was just 25 then and would be 33 now," the father explained—hopped off from Brunswick, Ga., for a 4,800-mile flight to Rio de Janeiro. Late that evening he was cited by a Norwegian ship off the coast of Dutch Guiana and then disappeared.

Still clinging to the hope that his son is alive, Dr. Redfern came from his Columbia (S. C.) home in response to a telegram from the state department. The message informed him that Tom Roch, a Brazilian jungle explorer, now "on the beach" in Panama, had repeated to Vice-Consul Park, at Colon, his twice told tale of having found the missing aviator in Dutch Guiana three years ago.

State department officials were unable Friday to give Dr. Redfern any further information pending receipt of a comprehensive report of Roche's story due here today by air mail.

Dr. Redfern said he would report before deciding what, if any action, might be taken to continue the search for his son.

Young Redfern, the German-American explorer told Vice-Consul Park, is crippled and living among the Itabo tribe of Indians on the river Madeira, in the hinterlands of Dutch Guiana, as a "medicine man."

"Yes, I know that Roche has told the story before," Dr. Redfern told state department officials Friday, "and I know that an expendition we financed in 1932 and led by Roche failed to find any trace of my boy.

"I still cling to the hope and belief, however, that he is still alive somewhere in the jungles of South America. Rescue expeditions have found no trace of him in Brazil or British Guiana, but we know he reached the mainland, and his line of flight would have taken him approximately over the Duth Guiana jungles where Roche claims to have seen and talked with him."

Cards From Roche Received

Dr. Redfern said he had never had any direct contact with Roche but that within the last year had received two postal cards from him from Rio de Janeiro on which Roche wrote he actually had seen and talked with Paul. The missing flier had been badly injured, he said, but would be all right again with proper medical attention.

The Brazilian declared that he wanted to keep his word to Paul—that he would rescue him from the Idians and the jungle—and would do so whether or not there were any more funds for expedition expenses.

Redfern explained that Roche's statement referred to an expedition in 1932, led by Roche, which had cost the Redfern family approximately $5,000. The money, he explained, had been accounted for as expenses of the expedition.

"Roche came to my brother, Richard, now dead, in Rochester, N. Y., with his story," Dr. Redfern said Friday, "and convinced him that he had actually seen and talked with Paul. He told us things about him that we couldn't account for unless he had talked with the boy.

"The rescue expedition failed to find any trace of Paul or his ship, largely, I think, because of financial difficulties and Roche's arrest by Brazilian authorities for some reason that has never been made quite clear.

No Proof of Death

"We have no proof that my boy isn't alive. We know he was seen by a Norwegian ship, 165 miles off the Venezuelan coast, and that he headed for land. We have reports he was seen and heard by Indians over the Orinoco river, and as far south as St. Cuthbert's Mission, near Georgetown, British Guiana. We have reports that Indians from the jungle told travelers they had seen a man with white skin in the jungle region between Matto Grosso and the Peruvian border who, the Indians said, had come to them like a gigantic bat out of the sky.

"Before Paul left he told me he might have to fly over the Guiana highlands, which would have put him in the approximate location Roche claims to have found him. We know he had sufficient gasoline to get that far. And so, despite all these things to the contrary and the absence of any definite proof, I still hope and pray that he is alive somewhere, unable to make his way back to civilization."

DINNER AT SEVEN

When we're invited out to dine
At seven o'clock it's always nine
Before the maid with looks reserved
Comes in to say: "The dinner's served!"

And since it is our rule to strive
As we are bidden to arrive,
It always seems to be our fate
To stand around the room and wait.

From seven to nine we watch them serve
The dainty things they call hors d'oeuvre;
But one grows weary taking snips
Of bacon and potato chips.

'Tis hard a hungry man to please
With little dabs of cottage cheese,
And celery stuffed, however fine,
Won't hold a man from seven to nine.

And now since seven means nine I know,
I always eat before I go.
Thus, with my fortitude preserved
I don't care when the dinner's served.

44,000 More Troops Mobilized By Italy for Service in Africa

Rome, June 1 (AP).—Italy mobilized 44,000 more troops for service in East Africa Friday shortly after new "provocative" incidents calculated to strain still further Italy's already tense relations with Ethiopia were officially disclosed.

The controlled press said the new mobilization order, which pushes past 225,000 the total soldiers and workmen destined for Africa, represented "Italy's decision to answer by force of arms the menaces of the situation."

An official communique, issued earlier, charged Ethiopian authorities and soldiers with arresting Italian diplomatic couriers carrying mail to the Italian consulate at Gondar May 12, rifling the mail and releasing the couriers from jail at Ras Gassa only after representations by the consulate.

Press Assails Critics

Sharply assailed in Friday's newspapers were certain "unenlightened European quarters" which criticized or tended to obstruct Italy's policy toward Ethiopia.

(Associated Press Editor's Note: French and British pressure at Geneva last week caused Italy to accept arbitration of her quarrel with Ethiopia, something Benito Mussolini previously had rejected. Authoritative quarters at London said Friday the British embassy in Rome had protested to the Italian government attacks made by the Italian press against Great Britain, on the grounds that the government was responsible due to its control of the press).

Friday's mobilization orders involved one army division and two Fascist Black Shirt divisions. The official communique announcing it said:

"The partial mobilization of Ethiopian forces and the arrival at Ethiopia of additional war materials require us to adjust new defensive measures in order to guarantee the security of our East Africa colonies from any attack."

Naval Official Named

The communique also announced recall to arms of strong contingents of officers, non-commissioned officers and privates of the navy and the designation of Rear-Admiral Barone as head of the Italian naval forces in the Red Sea. It said the naval class of 1913, due to be sent home soon after two years of service, will be kept under arms.

An earlier communique accused Ethiopian couriers carrying mail to the Italian consulate at Gondar, while the Stefani (Italian) News Agency carried reports from Djibouti, French Somaliland, that Ethiopian soldiers beat and seriously injured two Czechoslovaks who were slow to halt when so commanded.

Germany's formerly important export trade in sugar has practically disappeared, according to reports of American trade observers in the Reich.

URGE SEATING OF RUSH HOLT

Senate Committee Chairman Receives 500 Letters for Young Senator.

Washington, June 1 (AP).—More than 500 letters protesting against the move to have Senator-elect Rush Holt (Dem., W. Va.) denied a seat in the senate poured in Friday upon Senator George (Dem., Ga.), chairman of the senate elections committee, which will hold a hearing on the case today.

All of the letters came from West Virginia and most of them were from labor organizations and individual members of such organizations.

Among them were several petitions bearing from a dozen to 200 signatures. Virtually every United Mine Workers' local in the state sent Senator George notice that the local had adopted a resolution demanding that Holt be given his seat as soon as he presents himself for it.

Easton Accepts Responsibility

John B. Easton, president of the state federation of labor, informed George in a letter that he was responsible for the deluge of mail in support of Holt's seating. He said the move against Holt was the work of "a handful of disgruntled persons."

Meanwhile, the 29-year-old senator-elect himself was completing the brief which he will submit to the committee today in support of his stand that he will be fully entitled to senate membership on June 19, his thirtieth birthday, when he plans to present himself for the oath of office.

Challenged by Hatfield

Holt's eligibility for his seat has been challenged in a petition filed with the senate by former Senator Hatfield (Rep., W. Va.) whom the youthful legislator defeated in last fall's election.

Hatfield's counsel, Grant P. Hall, of Charleston, is expected to appear at the hearing.

Capt. Rene Pugnet (inset), commodore of the French Line, was on the bridge when the S. S. Drinks to Death as Classmates Raise Their Glasses in His Honor

Baltimore, June 1.—Thirty-two physicians, graduates of the Baltimore Medical college thirty years ago, sat in the Lord Baltimore hotel Thursday night, re-living memories of their years together and drinking toasts to their absent classmates.

They lifted their glasses to Dr. Chester C. Groff, of Azone Park, New York, one of the most popular men in the class. They recalled that he had been a glamorous figure in the early days of the World war, when he had joined the Russian army as a physician and, before the revolution, had become a general.

They had wanted Dr. Groff to attend the reunion, but all letters sent him had been ignored. Nevertheless, they lifted their glasses and toasted him.

About that time, in a room in the Southern hotel, just a block or two away, Dr. Groff lay on a bed with a Bible open beside him and lifted a glass to his lips. It was his last drink, for the glass contained poison.

When police broke into the room about 3 a. m. Thursday, they found a note addressed "Dear Coroner," in which Dr. Groff said he was committing suicide because of a "malignant" disease he feared. Friends said it was cancer.

Before he drank the poison, Mr. Groff had sent a telegram to his wife, Mrs. Dorothy Groff, in Washington, summoning her to the hotel room, and a special delivery letter to a friend in Washington, saying that he was going to commit suicide. The friend notified the Baltimore police.

A native of Washington, Dr. Groff entered practice there after his graduation from the Baltimore Medical college, which later was absorbed by the University of Maryland Medical school.

Shortly after the outbreak of the World war he joined a group of other physicians who entered the service of the Russian army. In a few years he was commissioned a general and made superintendent of a Russian veterans hospital.

When the Russian forces surrendered, he became a physician with the American army, attaining the rank of major before the war ended.

Specializing in mental disorders, he later practiced medicine in Richmond Hill, Long Island, and other New York cities.

U. S. JURIST WHO RULED AGAINST NEW DEAL QUITS

Louisville, Ky., June 1 (AP).—Judge Charles I. Dawson, whose recent adverse decisions on important new deal legislation attracted national attention, late Friday announced his resignation from the United States court, western district of Kentucky.

He stated he would return to private practice in order to make provisions for the future of his family.

Judge Dawson, who is 54 years old and has been on the bench here ten years, held the national industrial recovery act unconstitutional in the western Kentucky coal case, ruling that mining was an intrastate process.

Washington, June 1 (AP).—Senator Barkley, democrat, Kentucky, said Friday he and Senator Logan, democrat, Kentucky, had recommended the appointment of Elwood Hamilton, Louisville attorney, as judge of the federal district court for western Kentucky to succeed Judge Charles I. Dawson, resigned.

RANGE POPULATION SHRINKS

Reno, Nev. (AP).—Although this state contains 30 per cent of the remaining public domain of the United States, livestock on its public ranges have decreased 39 per cent since 1910, a survey shows. Drought, depression and other factors have cut the number of sheep from 1,585,000 to 890,000, cattle from 423,000 to 295,000 horses and mules from 102,000 to 63,000.

ALASKA HAS TIN TOO

Fairbanks, Alaska (AP). — Alaska has produced $1,096,000 worth of tin in the last 30 years. Mining interests believe government sponsored development of new tin sources would make the United States largely independent of foreign deposits.

Merchants of Raleigh, North Carolina, recently contributed $300 to buy poison for ridding the town of rats.

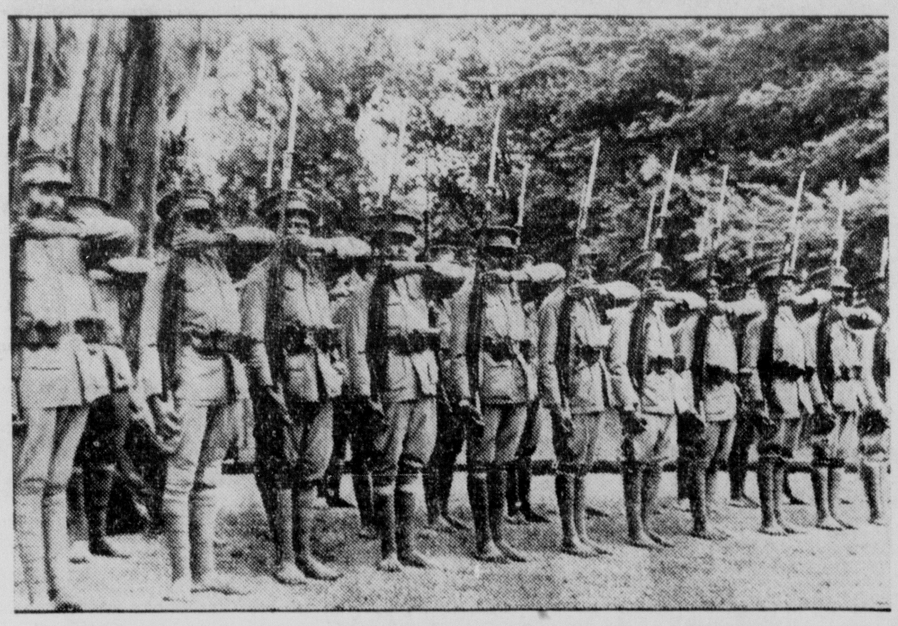
ROLL OF WAR DRUMS STIRS ETHIOPIA



With the threat of war with Italy hanging over them, these barefooted troops of Emporeor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia, marched out of Addis Ababa to take up their positions along the Italian frontier while their ruler, known traditionally as the King of Kings and Conquering Lion of Judah, carried to the League of Nations an appeal for intervention in his controversy with Benito Mussolini. ACTORS GIVEN COMEBACK ROLE

Many Movie Luminaries Revive Popularity With One Good Role.

By ROBBIN COONS

Hollywood — Every movie star sooner or later comes to the crossroads of fame where careers are decided for better or worse. Some of Hollywood's best known people are there now, facing the inevitable crisis. Their next pictures will tell the tale.

For about a year now Ruth Chatterton has been away from the cameras. Her last film for Warner Bros., "Journal of a Crime," was not the big success her fans hoped it would be. When that studio "raided" her away from Paramount, Miss Chatterton was called "the first lady of the screen." A series of undistinguished vehicles made the title an empty phrase bestowed in advertising only. Soon she will be coming back, for Columbia, the studio that gave Grace Moore her chance. "Feather in Her Hat," a story by I. A. R. Wylie, will be the Chatterton "test case."

Gloria Swanson, battling to regain her old position as the screen's foremost charmer, is still under contract to M-G-M, where as yet no plans for her have been announced. Her last film, "Music in the Air," did her no great good. What she needs, everyone agrees, is a strong dramatic story.

Barbara Stanwyck, like Miss Chatterton a former Warnerite, has been inactive since her final film there, "A Woman in Red," currently showing with fair success. Stanwyck fans argue that he Warner stories never fully realized her potentialities, and are looking for her to sign soon with another company for a hit as telling as her "Ladies of Leisure" for Columbia. Present indications are toward an alignment with Metro, but that is indefinite as yet.

Paramount is exerting every effort to provide Marlene Dietrich with a strong picture to follow her latest. After it was previewed, executives must have been convinced that for her next the best would be none too good. They have gone through hundreds of stories already in search of the right one.

This studio provided an instrument, in "Four Hours to Kill," for Richard Barthelmess to "come back" successfully after several mediocre films and a year's idleness. Columbia, in "The Whole Town's Talking," gave Edward G. Robinson the opportunity for a hit he sorely needed. And William Powell was all but "washed up" when along came "The Thin Man" and greater popularity than ever.

But each of these, like every other star at one time or another, stood at that crossroads of fame, uncertain which way to turn. One more picture without distinction would have relegated any of them to the ranks of fallen—or falling—stars.

CAPITAL Ins and Outs

By Herbert Plummer

Washington.—When congressional guns, large and small, were being trained on Harold L. Ickes, secretary of the interior, after President Roosevelt asked for his $4,880,000,000 work relief fund, he remarked laconically to newspapermen at a press conference:

"I've known for a long time I'm not loved with the fervor to which I think I am entitled. If a man worked hard at it, he couldn't get up a bigger list of enemies than I."

That was back in January when some members of congress were disturbed over the fact that the president might select Ickes to administrate the huge work-relief fund.

Since that time Ickes has requested congress to give him an assistant at a salary of $10,000 a year who will bear the title of under secretary of the interior. The senate fell in line with the idea readily. The house demurred at first, but on second thought, overwhelmingly agreed to the proposition.

The things said about Ickes and his work by members of congress while considering his request for an undersecretary were in marked contrast to those uttered a few months ago. Democrats who had criticized him sharply before went out of their way to compliment him.

Even some of those who had announced they would resist his request either kept silent or went along with the majority.

The explanation for this change of heart, insofar as the house of representatives is concerned, is not difficult to find. In a word it was just simple, commonsense politics.

Since the senate approved the additional assistant for Ickes President Roosevelt has announced the set-up of his "Big Three" for the administration of the work-relief fund. Harold L. Ickes is one of them—chief of the all-important work allotment group.

While the president has said he will have final say-so as to how the money is spent, he also has indicated he will depend on the Ickes group for guidance. That being true and since all congressional districts and political subdivisions are now exerting and will continue to exert pressure on their members of congress, the change of heart of the latter is not so difficult to understand.

Personal considerations undoubtedly will have no part in the allocation of the $4,880,000,000 but it's good politics to play safe anyway.

FRANCE MOVES TO SAVE FRANC

Fernand Bouisson Is Named Premier Under New Coalition Cabinet.

(Copyright, 1935, by Associated Press)

Paris, Saturday, June 1.—A new coalition cabinet, pledged to save the franc, rose Friday under the premiership of Fernand Bouisson, and was virtually assured the dictatorial financial powers in the quest of which the government of Pierre-Etienne Flandin collapsed.

Bouisson, veteran ringmaster of many parliamentary debates, completed his ministry early today after drawing consent to his program from the various political parties because of the national emergency.

Seeks To Avert Panic

Bouisson, who ruled the chamber of deputies for nine years as presiding officer, will read the ministerial declaration, but will present no arguments and will conduct no debate, the parties being represented as agreeing to grant him decree powers.

The 60-year-old leader was pledged to act quickly, with the outward flow of gold undiminished, to avert the panic which Flandin had predicted if drastic remedies were delayed.

Henri Roy, who was listed to be minister of agriculture, was expected to accept the post, but Bouisson was unable to reach him. Roy was minister of public works under Flandin.

Bouisson's is the ninety-eighth cabinet in the Third Republic's sixty-five years of existence. It is the ninth cabinet in Lebrun's three years and three weeks of presidency.

Flandin's cabinet lasted one week less than seven months. The average cabinet life since 1871 has been three days less than eight months, the average since the World war five and a half months.

The official cabinet list follows:

Foreign affairs—Pierre Laval.

Finance—Maurice Palmade.

Commerce—Laurent Eynac.

War—General Louis Felix Maurin.

Navy—Francois Pietri.

Air—General Victor Dentain.

Justice—Georges Henot.

Labor—Louis Frossard.

Pensions—Camille Perfetti.

Colonies—Louis Rollin.

Communications—Georges Mandel.

Public Works—Joseph Paganon.

Merchant marine—William Bertrand.

Agriculture—Henri Roy.

Education—Mario Roustan.

Health—Ernest Lafont.
